WEATHER SYNOPSIS BY REGION

NORTHERN CALIFORNIA

 Hot/dry through Wednesday, locally gusty north winds again Sacramento Valley next few nights and Thursday ***

High pressure will be over the region today then be replaced by a weak trough Wednesday. Afternoon highs will be the warmest so far this year with just over 100 in the warmest inland areas with min afternoon Relative Humidity (RH) as low as 5-10% in the driest valleys, but mostly between 10-20% today and Wednesday. The low pressure trough will become stronger Thursday through Saturday and appears likely to linger into early next week. There is still some uncertainty about those events past Saturday. The trough will bring temperatures down to near seasonal values and increase RH. There will also be a chance of some mainly mountain showers or isolated thunderstorms Friday onward, mainly in the eastern areas of the region, especially in the NE quarter of the Geographic Area. Northerly downslope winds will gust mostly to 5-25 mph in the Sacramento Valley and surrounding foothills through midday today and return tonight, mainly in the northern Sacramento Valley areas. More widespread and stronger north winds appear likely to develop there Thursday. Winds will be somewhat variable but still quite northerly at times across the region Friday through the weekend.

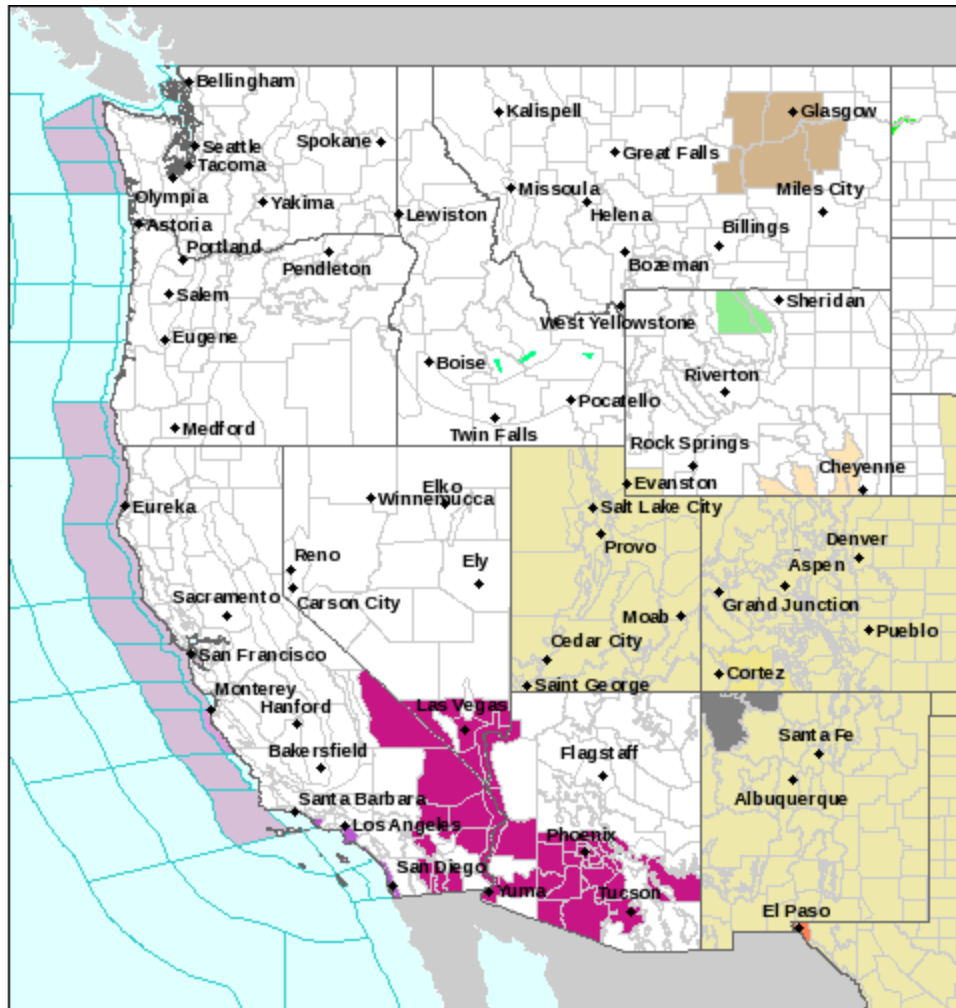

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA

High pressure will continue to produce clear skies with very warm temperatures today and Wednesday. Highs will again range from the 70s at the coast to the upper 90s to 103 in the warmest inland valleys and foothills. Minimum RH will fall into the teens for 6-8 hours each afternoon, but light winds and clear skies should allow for at least fair recovery the next two nights. A slow-moving trough is expected to bring much cooler weather during the second half of the week into the weekend. Onshore flow will result in breezy conditions in and near the desert areas. Expect wind gusts to 40 mph in the Antelope Valley, Banning Pass and the Kern County Mountains each afternoon Thursday into the weekend. Temperatures will drop 5-8 degrees Thursday and Friday with readings in the 80s in the valleys by the weekend. Nearly all of the subtropical moisture over the Pacific is expected to be shunted east of the area, but one or two thunderstorms will be possible along the Colorado River Valley Friday and Saturday. Cooler weather will lead to higher RH at lower elevations, but the mountains above 5,000 feet may experience single digit RH beginning Thursday. Next week, warmer and less windy weather is expected to return. No significant thunderstorm activity is expected the next 7-10 days.
